

The words a, an, and the are called articles. In English, readers often expect to see one of those words before a noun (person, place, or thing).

Which Article to Use

Definite article: the Writers use the when they are talking about a specific noun, called a definite noun.

the store

Here, the word the tells us that the writer is talking about a specific store.

The can be used with both singular and plural nouns.

the stores

Indefinite articles: a, an

Writers use a and an when they are talking about a noun that is not specific (an indefinite noun).

Use a for nouns that begin with a consonant.

a store

Here, the word a tells us that the writer could be talking about any store.

Use an for nouns or noun phrases that begin with a vowel or vowel sound.

an apple an electronics store

A and an are only used for singular nouns, not plural.

a stores an apples

Instead of using a or an for plural indefinite nouns, a writa

The Importance of Articles

When a writer does not make a noun plural or give it an article, this creates a problem for the reader.

✗ Max had idea.

Does the writer mean that Max had one idea or more than one? It is impossible to know. Instead, the sentence should look like one of these:

✍ Max had the idea.

✍ Max had an idea.

✍ Max had ideas.

Singular Nouns that Never Need Articles

Some proper nouns do not need articles at all.

✍ Huntsville, TX

✍ Sam Houston State University

✍ President Bob

These nouns do not need articles because there is only one of them in the whole world.

Note: Writers say The United States instead of just United States because here, the word The is not just an article. It is part of the name of the country.